

Broken Plant Labels

Rob Cole

Isn't it annoying when you find a plant label in the garden that is totally faded or snapped off and blown away, and you can't remember what the plant was?

One answer is to write the name of the plant at the bottom of the label as well as at the top, then if the top is snapped off, you can nearly always find the remaining bottom half in the soil and be reunited with the name. And because the bottom of the label is tucked away out of the elements, the writing will be almost as clear as the day it was written.
